

Sam Elliott who came through Runway Training's Graduate Scheme

In choosing a graduate job I wanted something that would challenge me as well as enable me to make a difference. In Runway Training I found a company full of enthusiastic and highly driven people who are constantly looking at ways to improve and offer a high quality service to our learners.

I started out in the maths and English team and quickly gained my teaching qualifications along with a wealth of knowledge on e-learning, learner engagement and best practice. Working in education and training is all about being able to use a number of strategies, techniques and resources to inspire learners to develop the skills they require to achieve their goals.

The support from Runway Training has been fantastic, I have regular meetings with the management team who have offered support and guidance since day one. Gaining industry specific qualifications has helped develop my skills set and build my knowledge. The opportunities to network with other professionals has helped me build up some great connections whilst staying abreast of the changes in the sector.

I now work as the Apprenticeship Manager and love every minute of it. Each day is different with an ever changing landscape and new challenges all the time. I manage all of our apprenticeship provision and have a great team who support me. In education I have found an industry where I can make a difference and in Runway Training a company that isn't afraid to let me try new things and supports me in my career development every step of the way.
